This study sought to determine the prevalence, risk factors, and outcomes for macrovascular disease in a cohort of patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE). We performed a retrospective analysis of 95 patients with SLE who had evidence of carotid disease, either by imaging or endarterectomy, or peripheral arterial disease, as determined by Duplex or ultrasonography. We then compared this population to the generally healthy population to calculate an expected prevalence. Eighty-three of the 95 patients were female and the mean age at diagnosis was 39 years. The frequency of carotid disease was 12.7% (11/85), peripheral arterial disease was 3.5% (3/85), and erythrocyte sedimentation rate > 100 mm/h was 59.5% (58/95). The prevalence of macrovascular disease was significantly increased in patients with SLE compared to a general population: 1.4% vs. 0.1% expected, p 100 mm/ f678ea9f9e
